"WHERE IS MY WANDERING WIFE?"

One Reel Star Comedy

Disappointed in love, Harry cannot bear to think of his girl marrying the blacksmith's son; but she goes ahead with the marriage nevertheless. Harry bribes his janitor with the promise of a dollar to hurl some old shoes, with bricks encased, at the groom as he leaves the church.

He is mistaken for the groom and receives the full barrage which knocks him for a row of 'dobe huts on the steps of the church. Harry's girl thinks it a cheap play for sympathy and walks off with hubby. Arriving at their new nest, the love birds feel sorry for Harry and decide to send him the folding bed - Wifey hates 'em - as a wedding gift.

The bridesmaids play a practical joke on wifey and put knock-out drops in her iced tea. She passes out and they put her on the bed and close it. Hubby comes home, finds Wifey gone, and sends the bed to Harry. Harry is trying, at this time, to drown his sorrows with a heavy mixture of "gas".

The bed arrives as a complete surprise to Harry. A note is attached: "Take this with my compliments - I have no further use for ... He opens the bed and finds his old love in it. She is overcome by the note and weeps on Harry's chest. Meanwhile Hubby is told that his wife is enroute to Harry's and he pursues.

He arrives and finds them in close embrace. Chasing Harry through the house, he is stopped by the janitor, who for the promised dollar, keeps Hubby at bay while Harry disguises himself to escape. The janitor finds he has been given a leaden dollar and exposes Harry. Hubby locks Harry in the bed and takes Wifey home.
